Let's Go To the Blue Grotto!

Have you ever been to the Isle of Capri? Have you taken the tour of the Blue Grotto? If you have, no need to look at this message; you know what it's like. But if you haven't, come along on this tour.

The Blue Grotto is only open when the weather's good; bad weather? No tour.

So you buy your ticket and you climb aboard a beautiful big boat on the sparkling sea, camera around your neck, ready for the adventure. The boat starts up and off you go. As you approach the Grotto, you see many row boats bobbing in the water. Row boats?

Then you discover you have to jump from your big, beautiful boat into the tiny row boat while both are bouncing up and down in the water. One false step and you'll be in the water. But you make it. Whew!

Your boat has to wait its turn to enter. When you finally get there, watch out! If you don't lay flat in the boat, you will most certainly crack your head on the rocks of the entrance, which is just three feet high. And the boat is still bobbing up and down, and up and down. But then--you're in!

Click here and keep your head down! Be sure to turn on your sound and go to full screen. You can skip the opening ad after 3 seconds.

Think you can take a swim in the grotto? No, no. It's illegal (though people do it anyway).
