

We're all restricted to our houses so what's there to sing about? This guy is celebrating (in song) all the great things that are produced in Italy: blood oranges, prosciutto, gelato (yum!), parmesan cheese, pizza, San Marzano tomatoes.... the list is endless. Just so you get a better idea of how many there are, take a look at the video below.

We sometimes take for granted all the good things we have access to—things produced and imported from Italy.

Visitors to Italy continually rave about the freshness of the food, the simplicity of it, and the exceptional preparation of everything. Food is not frozen for months; most Italians shop daily. How much fresher can you get things? It all turns into magic food—so good. As one visitor to Italy commented (after having pasta with zucchini blossoms in a local trattoria in Rome): “The pasta brought tears to my eyes it was so good.”

But we bet you don't know all of the products that Italy is famous for. This video will give you a Reader's Digest version (even though the guy's singing is not the best!). But have a little fun watching it and look quickly at the photos as it's all in Italian.

And what does he say at the very end? Here's the translation:

Click here for the video. Be sure to follow the photos.

©2020 Lincoln Hills Italian Club | Lincoln Hills Italian Club

Web Version

Preferences

Forward

Unsubscribe

Powered by
GoDaddy Email Marketing®